APPENDIX

Eligible Recipients

Reimbursement for additional tax paid on superannuation contributions

1. NSW police officers are eligible for reimbursement if they incur additional tax liabilities on superannuation contributions in either 2023-24 or 2024-25 due to the impact of compulsory employer superannuation contributions for death and disability insurance premiums.

Lump-sum payment for low- and middle-income earners

2. NSW police officers are entitled to a lump-sum payment if they exceed the concessional contributions cap in either 2023-24 or 2024-25 due to the impact of compulsory employer superannuation contributions for death and disability insurance premiums and in the same financial year have an adjusted taxable income of $135,000 or less.
 - a. Eligible officers will receive an after-tax payment of $1,500. This payment can only be claimed for either the 2023-24 or 2024-25 financial year but not both (i.e. a maximum of one after-tax payment of $1,500 per officer).
 - b. If an eligible officer has one or more child in childcare over the course of the financial year, they will receive an additional after-tax payment of $1,000. This payment can only be claimed for either the 2023-24 or 2024-25 financial year but not both (i.e. a maximum of one additional after-tax payment of $1,000 per officer).
 - c. For the avoidance of doubt:
 - i. the income test will apply to officers alone and will not include the adjusted taxable income of their partners
 - ii. an officer may receive the additional $1,000 after-tax payment even if their partner also received the additional $1,000 after-tax payment in respect of the same child or a different child
 - iii. the actual amount of the lump sum payment will be grossed up to reflect a net receipt of $1,500 (or $2,500 if the second component is included for a child in childcare) after subtracting the officer's estimated resulting increased income tax.

Payment eligibility

1. Commonwealth payments will be made:

- a. for amounts New South Wales incurs in fringe benefits tax in respect of the reimbursements and/or the actual amounts New South Wales pays in additional income to compensate officers for the additional income tax they pay on lump-sum payments;
 - b. on the basis of police officers' marginal tax rate plus the 2 per cent Medicare levy. It does not include reimbursement for the additional Medicare levy surcharge that could be incurred by officers; and
 - c. annually in arrears after New South Wales: reimburses police officers for taxes paid on eligible excess concessional contributions made in 2023-24 and 2024-25; incurs any FBT in respect of the reimbursements; and pays single lump sum payments to eligible officers.
2. The eligible excess contribution amount will be capped at the lesser of:
- a. the notional cap space; i.e. the concessional cap for the financial year minus the compulsory employer superannuation contributions (not including the compulsory employer insurance contributions);
 - b. the compulsory employer insurance contributions;
 - c. the total voluntary concessional superannuation contributions; and
 - d. the officer's total excess concessional contributions for the year, net of any compulsory employee insurance contributions paid from pre-tax income.
3. Payments will not be made for:
- a. excess non-concessional contributions, since these are under the control of the individual officer;
 - b. compulsory employee insurance contributions paid from pre-tax income;
 - c. claims made after the final reporting date of 5 June 2026, even if New South Wales or the police officers would otherwise be eligible for reimbursement; or
 - d. claims for which payments have been made previously.
